Supernatural Sanctuary

Hiromitsu Suetake, Prof. James Becerra.

A common psychological phenomenon of vast and godly nature on our human mind, provides instinctive and fundamental emotion, fear. Fear derived from uncertainty and uncontrol. We as humans internally feed the sensation and pattern to treat very small margin of winning, like wearing the same underwear for every exams, which, in Western language, represented as "superstition". From the ancient times, humans have built large scale assembles, pyramids and ziggurats, from superstition to utmost, even seemingly irresponsible chance of nature. For this project, I installed a large heroic structure, which looks like a temple of sorts, resembling contour of the place which exhibits variety of geological shapes to provide our scale. The structure opens up as if visitors who are climbing up the contour feel not intimidated by its scale but welcome to walk in.